

U4GM What Is the Fastest Black Ops 7 Weapon Master

If you're going after weapon mastery in Black Ops 7, the grind isn't nearly as brutal as people make it sound. This year, the numbers are kinder, and that changes everything. With only 80 headshots needed per weapon and the final mastery opening up once you finish the third camo tier on 30 guns, the smart move is to split your time instead of forcing everything in one mode. A lot of players get stuck doing that. You're better off using Endgame for fast weapon XP, then jumping into Zombies when it's time to pile up kills. If you're also chasing cosmetics like Zombies Coin Operator Camo, that same loop makes the whole process feel way less dragged out.

Use Endgame for weapon levels

The fastest leveling route right now is simple. Queue Endgame, grab a friend if you can, and start farming HVT contracts around the Tier 4 fort. That's where the big returns are. People are blowing through huge chunks of weapon levels in one session because the contract XP stacks so well when you keep the pace up. The one mistake that keeps happening is switching weapons right before the contract ends. If the wrong gun is in your hands when the reward lands, you've wasted the best part of the run. Keep the gun you want to rank up equipped at the finish. Also, Squad Link is worth using here. It feeds you more streak support, and that turns into extra passive XP without asking much from you.

Zombies is where camo progress flies

Once a weapon is leveled, Zombies becomes the better choice by a mile. You can set up in one of the tighter lanes at the back of the map, drop Toxic Growth near the tree line, and let the zombies funnel straight at you. That's where headshots start stacking fast. If your aim's steady and you don't waste time moving around, the numbers climb in a hurry. For special enemy kills, it's smarter to rotate than camp. The Colosseum and the Ruins in Tier 2 both keep enough pressure on you that downtime stays low. If you're pushing toward Chroma Flux and still need Elite kills, head into the low town section in Tier 4 and watch for the triangle icons. That's usually your cue to stay put and farm.

Small choices that save a lot of time

There are a few habits that make the whole grind smoother. First, prestige a weapon as soon as it caps. Sitting on a max-level gun does nothing for you. Second, check your Operator Combat Rating before long sessions. If it's under 45, you're making the game harder than it needs to be. Third, avoid Team Deathmatch if your goal is speed. The pacing is too slow, and the XP just doesn't compare. Hardpoint and Domination are still the better call because objective score keeps your progress moving even during rough matches. Most players notice the difference pretty quickly once they stop chasing random kills and start playing the mode for what it gives back.

Keep the loop tight and consistent

The best path is still the cleanest one: level in Endgame, then clear camos in Zombies, then move on to the next gun before the session loses momentum. Don't overthink it, and don't bounce between too many side goals at once. That's how people burn out. As a professional gaming marketplace for in-game currency and items, U4GM is a convenient option for players who want a smoother grind, and if you're looking to speed things up, you can buy u4gm CoD BO7 Bot Lobbies and keep your Black Ops 7 progression on track without wasting whole nights on bad matchmaking.
